Texas enviará Guardia Nacional a la frontera Por CHRISTOPHER SHERMAN y WILL WEISSERT, Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas, 21 de iulio de 2014 (AP): Texas desplegará 1.000 efectivos de la Guardia Nacional en la frontera con México en el próximo mes para combatir a quienes el gobernador llamó el lunes criminales que explotan el incremento en la inmigración ilegal de menores y familias que llegan a Estados Unidos.

Perry, quien ha criticado abiertamente la respuesta de la Casa Blanca a la crisis en la frontera y quien estudia si busca una segunda candidatura a la presidencia, dijo que el estado tiene la responsabilidad de actuar luego de las "palabras vanas y las promesas vacías" del gobierno federal.

"No me quedaré inmóvil mientras nuestros ciudadanos están siendo atacados y los niños de Centroamérica están detenidos entre inmundicia", dijo el gobernador.

El despliegue de las tropas de la Guardia Nacional, que tienen capacidad para aplicar la ley bajo el mando del estado, le costará a Texas unos 12 millones de dólares al mes.

Las tropas "sólo disuadirán y entregarán" a los inmigrantes y no detendrán a ninguna persona, dijo John Nichols, jefe administrativo militar de Texas, aunque aclaró que podría detener a personas si se le solicita.

"Creemos que vendrán y nos dirán: 'Por favor

La Policía de Aduanas v Protección Fronteriza no respondió inmediatamente el lunes a una solicitud para que hiciera comentarios.

El gobernador pareció molestarse ante los señalamientos hechos por legisladores demócratas de está que Texas militarizando las comunidades al llevar ahí a la Guardia Nacional

No obstante, el jefe de la policía del condado Cameron, Omar Lucio, dijo desconocer si las tropas llegarían a esa parte de la frontera y preguntó qué beneficios aportarían en caso de que lo hicieran.

"Esas personas están entrenadas para la guerra, no para labores policiacas", dijo Lucio, cuyo condado comprende la ciudad de Brownsville. "Creo que el dinero estaría mejor invertido si se le diera a las agencias encargadas de hacer que se cumpla la ley cercanas a la frontera".

Más de 3.000 agentes de la Patrulla Fronteriza están actualmente activos en el sur de Texas, y Perry le hapedido al presidente Barack Obama en reiteradas ocasiones que despache a la Guardia Nacional a la frontera.

Desde octubre, más de 57.000 menores de edad sin compañía han entrado sin autorización a Estados Unidos, más del doble que un año antes. La mayoría procede de Honduras, Guatemala y El Salvador, donde la violencia imperante y la

El gobierno de Obama ha señalado que la ola ha reducido su intensidad en las semanas recientes, y que los agentes de la Patrulla Fronteriza en el Valle del Río Grande encontraron a menos de 500 menores la semana pasada, cuando el mes pasado hallaban a 2.000 cada semana.

Como gobernador, Perry puede desplegar a las tropas de la Guardia Nacional, pero le corresponde al estado pagar por ellas. Una orden de Obama habría obligado a Washington a pagar la cuenta.

"El gobernador Perry había hecho referencia en varias ocasiones a su deseo de hacer una declaración simbólica a las personas de Centroamérica en el sentido de que la frontera está cerrada", dijo el vocero de la Casa Blanca, Josh Earnest, "Él cree que la mejor manera de hacerlo es mandar a 1.000 elementos de la Guardia Nacional hacia la frontera. Me parece que un símbolo mucho más poderoso sería la aprobación, por parte de los dos partidos, de una legislación que incluya una cifra histórica de inversión para seguridad a la frontera envíe a 20.000 trabajadores adicionales a la frontera".

Earnest también dijo que la Casa Blanca no ha recibido de la oficina de Perry el tipo de "comunicación formal" que usualmente acompaña a esos despliegues.

Grower rep fired after assaulting FLOC campaign leader, Oscar Sánchez

By Federico Martínez, Special to La Prensa

A representative for the North Carolina Growers Association was fired this past week after physically assaulting Oscar Sánchez. campaign leader for the Baldeman Velásque: FarmLaborOrganizing Committee's"Re spect, Recognition, Raise!" campaign, FLOC President Baldemar Velásauez confirmed on Sunday.

The attack, which was captured on video, occurred on July 9, 2014. The suspect, who the growers association and FLOC have not named, is being charged with assault locally, Velásquez said. The charges could not be confirmed at the time of publication. Representatives for the growers association could not be reached for further comment. The suspect was fired by the growers association after FLOC representatives filed a grievance over the attack, Velásquez said. It wasn't the first time that FLOC and farmworkers have complained about the suspect, he said.

threats before: he's been accused of sexual harassment" said Velásquez. "He's atypical bully whose always been allowed to keep doing it." The assault comes on the eve of a high profile visit by members of the British Parliament who want to see firsthand reports on the serious human rights abuses that FLOC and farmworkers say are occurring constantly in tobacco fields throughout North Carolina and the south: a charge that Revnolds American has steadfastly denied.

British American Tobacco owns 42 percent of Reynolds American, which FLOC officials hope they will use to push Reynolds into addressing their concerns.

Some of the problems FLOC has cited include: inadequate housing, belowminimum wages and wage theft, workplace injuries, pesticide and nicotine poisoning and other health-related problems.

The British contingency will arrive late Friday, July 25

> Velásquez, who lives in the Toledo area, had to go to North Carolina early this past week after his campaign worker, Oscar Sánchez, was attacked. Sánchez was shaken, but not seriously injured in the incident, Velásquez said.

"He's a tough old bird," said Velásquez

According to FLOC officials Sánchez had arrived at the North Carolina farm after haven taking FLOC members to local food bank. Previously Sánchez had been meeting with farmworkers who were concerned because the work season was off to a slow start due to the weather.

FLOC had filed a request for a fund managed by the North Carolina Growers Association to help workers survive when work is scarce. Sánchez said the growers' representative was singling out farmworkers who were requesting help and appeared to be trying to intimidate them.

After Sánchez corrected a mispronounced name, the growers' representative without warning crossed the 20 feet between him and Sánchez and began punching him in the face.

La Prensa—Immigration Reform

House, Senate and GOP, Democrats chart separate courses on southern border

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 23, 2014 (AP): Senate Democrats and House Republicans are moving separately to slash President Barack Obama's $3.7 billion emergency spending request for the border, but they're unlikely to end up with a deal that could pass both chambers.

Senate Appropriations Chairwoman Barbara Mikulski planned to unveil legislation Wednesday allocating $2.7 billion for more immigration judges, detention facilities and other resources on the South Texas border, where tens of thou-sands of unaccompanied minors have been arriving from Central America.

That amounts to a $1 billion reduction from Obama's request. But House Republicans were expected to go even further with more limited spending that would be focused more heavily on enforcement provisions, including National Guard troops, than on caring for the youths. House Republicans were to discuss their legislation Wednesday and hear from a border task force appointed by Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio.

Most problematically, Mikulski, D-Md., said she was omitting from her legislation any changes to a 2008 trafficking victims law that critics say has contributed to the crisis by allowing Central American youths to stay in this country indefinitely while awaiting far-off court dates. Republicans are demanding changes in that law as the price for approving any money for the crisis and have said that will be an important part of their legislation in the House.

"I don't believe the American people will support send-ing more money to the border unless both parties work together to address these policies and actually solve this problem," Boehner said.

The result looks like a stalemate, with little time left to resolve it because Congress' annual August recess is just around the corner. "Unfortunately, it looks like we're on a track to do absolutely nothing," Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, said.

It comes even as Homeland Security officials plead for action, saying overstressed border and immigration agen-cies will run out of money in the next two months. "Doing nothing in Congress is not an option," Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said. More than 57,000 minors have arrived since October, mostly from El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala.

The 2008 law guarantees them judicial hearings, which in practice allows them to stay in this country for years because of major backlogs in the immigration court system. Republicans want the law changed so unaccompanied Central American children can be treated like those from Mexico, who can be sent back by Border Patrol agents unless they can dem-onstrate a fear of return that necessitates further screening. Republicans say that's the only way to send a message to parents in the Central American nations that there's no point in sending their children on the arduous journey north. White House officials have indicated support for such changes but have sent mixed signals, under pres-sure from immigration advocates who say they would amount to sending kids fleeing vicious gang violence back home to their deaths Some Democrats initially were open to such changes but most are now strongly opposed.

"I'm very reluctant to change the law because I think these children face death, murder, vicious abuse, persecution, if they are returned," Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., said.

Polls suggest the public is paying attention and demanding a solution, but lawmakers could not say where a compromise might lie.

Lansing groups seek welcome for child immigrants

LANSING, July 23, 2014 (AP): A coalition of activists and religious leaders in Lansing is calling on the City Council to make the community a welcoming place for child immigrants from Central America.

Maximo Anguiano of the group Action of Greater Lansing spoke at a news conference Wednesday outside Cristo Rey Church, saying that "the simple word 'welcome" is why participants were holding the public action.

The effort comes amid protests and counter-protests surrounding plans by Grosse Pointe Park-based Wolverine Human Services to house Central American refugee children at its facility in Vassar.

So far, there are no reported plans for Lansing to take in any of the 57,000plus young Central American refugees.

The Lansing State Journal (http://on.lsj.com/ WFm3yk) says Mayor Virg Bernero has told refugee service agencies that Lansing is ready to help if needed. Information from: Lan-

Coco Loco: Bay County restaurant murals tout Mexican heritage

By SAM EASTER, The Bay City Times

BAY CITY, July 23, 2014 (AP): Mike McMath, wearing a paint-speckled Tshirt and a University of Michigan cap, speaks with a blue-collar easiness on the murals he's painting at Coco Loco Mexican Bar and Grill. He's been hard at work splashing artwork inside and outside the building since fall. The work is nearly complete.

"There's seven arches on the outside, and working with the owners we've come up with themes of Mexican h er it age — m ar i a ch is, piñatas, the dancing and the agave fields," he told The Bay City Times (http:// bit.ly/1kxcrfc). "I bounce around from arch to arch. It's tough, because I work so fast and so intense that four or five hours of doing that is like 10 hours of regular painting.

"It's very focus-intense," he said, "but fun."

McMath, a Midland resident and a father of three, is the owner of FauxPlay Decorative Painting, a company that specializes in mural painting and faux finishes much like the painted brickwork inside Coco Loco in Bangor Township. Working alongside his brother, his niece and apprentice and a said he has particularly enjoyed the opportunity he and his colleagues had to bring Mexican culture to life.

"It's nice, because I become a pair of hands," he said. "They (the owners) facilitate the idea, and I make it happen. We work through a couple of images and try and capture the right theme." He said he was concerned at first about making paintings too stereotypical, but he's pleased with the result; sitting inside the restaurant, he points out a farmer and agave field painted near the bar.

"You have to ask questions sometimes," he said, noting that some of the work can seem ambiguous. "What is this wall, what is this mural about? You get a little bit of an education."

Coco Loco owner José Costilla said he is pleased with McMath, who's painted at some of his other local restaurants through the past several years.

"Every single mural, there is a story," he said of his restaurant's interior, from folkloric dancing to the tequila distilling process. "If you follow the murals, the process is there the whole process of tequila, from the agave fields to the aging of the tequila."

Besides his paintings, McMath is also a performer. He and his brother Scott often team up as "Empty Canvas," which features an original work of art created as music is performed.

While his brother plays guitar, McMath paints and sings, often bringing up audience members to add a few brushstrokes. At a fundraiser event in Frankenmuth, he said, Michigan State University basketball coach Tom Izzo came up to give it a try. Izzo later signed the painting, McMath said, which raised more than $3,000 for charity.

The duo performs biweekly at the patio at the Riverfront Grille at the Doubletree hotel and conference center in downtown Bay City. The duo's next show takes place at 7 p.m. Thursday.

A 1984 graduate of Midland High School, McMath said he always knew he wanted to be an artist.

"It literally was kindergarten," he said. "I always thought I was the best artist in the class. It sounds arrogant, but that's what leads you to what you want to do." In 1990, McMath graduated with a fine arts degree from the University of Michigan. "The year I graduated, I had seen a person do faux marble. I had no idea how to do it, and I bought one book and I've been painting houses from there."

As for his work at Coco Loco, much of it can be seen driving by the restaurant. You'll have to do inside to see the interior murals. McMath said he can't pick a favorite.

"It's like picking a favorite kid," McMath said. "It's impossible, because each one has a different story."

By La Prensa Staffing

The Toledo Mud Hens defeated the Louisville Bats, 4 to 2, on Sunday, July 20, 2014 at the 12th annual Latino Heritage Night and scholarship presentation, presented by SAO and La Prensa.

This year's festivities featured pregame entertainment, 3-5 p.m., at the Ye Olde Cock n'Bull tavern, Huron and Washington, directly across from Fifth Third Field. Grupo Fuego, a popular Toledo/

Pontiac-based Tejano band, performed on the tavern's stage. Lead vocalist is diva Yvonne Ramos-Ybarra. The group has been recording new music for their upcoming release of a new CD. Yvonne and Fuego will also be the headliners in a special Selena Tribute at this year's MidWest LatinoFest, scheduled for August 30, 2014 at Promenade Park in downtown Toledo. Entertainment to the game

ballpark's main gate [Washington and Huron Streets] began at 4:30 p.m. and included mariachis and performances by El Corazón de México Ballet Folklorico, a non-profit Mexican dance troupe whose performers use dance in order to educate audiences on the rich culture of México. 1st European Colonial capital in the Americas is actually in South Carolina and founded by Spain

By SEANNA ADCOX, Associated Press COLUMBIA, S.C., July in 2001. 2014 (AP): The English Even in settlement of Jamestown, students' A Virginia, may be dubbed America's birthplace for the English, but North America's first colonial capital was actually established four decades earlier-and 400 miles -in South Carolina. away

A Beaufort-based nonprofit is working to give the Spanish town of Santa Elena its proper due and resume archaeological digs at the site located within the Ma-rine Corps Recruit Depot on Parris Island, thereby attracting tourists to the area.

The effort corresponds with a federal initiative to highlight Latino heritage sites. The National Park Service plans to release a curriculum this fall on Santa Elena for middle and high school teachers. Spain has offered to provide software, documents and other artifacts to help tell the town's story, as part of an agreement the U.S. signed with Spain last year on the initiative. "It's just not in the history books, and yet this was a very important part of our colonial history in the United States," said Stanley Bond, chief archaeologist at the National Park Service, which named Santa Elena a National Historic Landmark

Even in South Carolina, students' American history books essentially skip from Christopher Columbus to the 1607 settlement of Jamestown, then on to the 1620 landing in Plymouth, Massachusetts, barely mentioning the prior century of Spanish explora-tion. Essentially, that's be-cause the English won. "The Spanish history of this region was co-opted by the English," said Stephen Wise, director of the Parris Island Museum, which displays some Santa Elena artifacts. "The U.S. has been very much English-centric for a long, long time." The nonprofit Santa Elena

Foundation, created last year, plans to open an interpretive center at nearby Port Royal that tells not only of Santa Elena, but its role in the European struggle for control of North America.

Though Spain was given colonial rights to America in 1494 by a Spanish-born Catholic pope—and Port Royal Sound was where its treasure ships caught the trade winds back to Europe—the French managed to settle Parris Island first, in 1562. But the French abandoned Charlesfort within a year. Spain established Santa Elena on top of the remains in 1566, and it served as the Spanish capital until 1576, when colonists fled a Native American attack. That's when St. Augustine, Florida, became the Spanish capital. Though colonists returned to Santa Elena a year later, they abandoned it for good in 1587. due to threats from the English.

The foundation hopes to open a temporary center next year and a permanent ex-hibit in time for Santa Elena's 450-year anniversary in 2016. The group also hopes to fund full-time archaeolo-gists. In May, foundation members traveled to Spain to meet with officials, as well as a descendent of Santa Elena's governor, and see their historical records. The National Park Service arranged the four-day trip through the Spanish emhassy

The foundation does not yet have a total estimate for their plans. Board member Dick Stewart expects the first phase to cost $1-2 million. A mere 2 percent of the site has been excavated since 1979, when Santa Elena's location was confirmed. The state Institute of Ar chaeology and Anthropol-ogy at the University of South Carolina has conducted excavations periodically be (Continued on Page 10)

México: "Más negro que la noche" lleva terror a 3D

Por ISAAC GARRIDO, Associated Press

MEXICO, 23 de julio de 2014 (AP): Un clásico del cine de terror mexicano regresa para atemorizar a una nueva generación, llevando esta vez el nivel de miedo a una nueva dimensión. "Más negro que la noche" es la primera cinta mexicana filmada en 3D, lo que de por sí resultó terrorífico para los realizadores. "El hecho de ser los de aprendizaje que no conocíamos", dijo el guionista y director Henry Bedwell a The Associated Press en una entrevista reciente. Al realizador le tomó casi diez años de su vida planear el proyecto, concebido como una cinta tradicional. Fue en una junta a unas semanas de iniciar el rodaje cuando la coproductora española Antonia Nava propuso hacerla en 3D.

"Todo el trabajo previo se agarró y se tiró a la basura. Fue empezar de nuevo. Si ves una foto de esa junta y la cara de todos, es la clásica escena de horror", relató sobre la sorpresiva propuesta.

La cinta se estrenará el 14 de agosto en México con unas 1100 copias, una cantidad y fecha poco usual para los pocos filmes de terror realizados en México. El filme es una adaptación de la cinta homónima de negro que la noche" es protagonizada por las mexicanas Zuria Vega, Eréndira Ibarra, Adriana Louvier y la española Ona Casamiquela.

Casamiquela. Volver a contar la historia en 3D, 'lo veíamos lejano, súper caro y difícil'', señaló el actor y productor Josemaría Torre Hütt, quien explicó que por ello se realizó en coproducción con España.

Este país proporcionó la experiencia en rodaje en 3D de José María Aragonés, quien ha realizado muchos filmes en ese formato y la p o s t p r o d u c c i ó n estereoscópica a través de la compañía Apuntolapospo. Parte de los acuerdos entre ambos países fue realizar la postproducción en Barcelona, pues aunque en México ya se han realizado filmes de animación en 3D, todavía no se cuenta con la tecnología total para dar los toques finales a una cinta de acción real en ese formato.

"Hay cositas, pero no a este nivel y en esta cancha. Los efectos los podemos hacer en México, pero estereoscópicos es otra cosa", dijo Leonardo Zimbrón, otro de los productores mexicanos

Sin revelar cifras, los productores señalaron que hacerun filme en 3D aumentó los costos totales en un 30% v extendió la duración del rodaje en un 25%

Como en la original, la cinta sigue la odisea de una joven que recibe la herencia de una tía rica con la condición de que cuide a su mascota: un gato negro llamado Becker.

En un descuido el gato muere v a partir de entonces el grupo de amigas experimentan sucesos paranormales. Para Bedwell se trata de una adaptación-homenaje, pues "estamos contándola de manera diferente y tratando de llegar a una nueva generación sin descuidar a la generación que la vio" y "sin descuidar los elementos básicos que Taboada siempre uso en sus historias".

De hecho, en una de las escenas, el nuevo elenco está viendo un fragmento de la cinta original. En la nueva versión el 3D forma parte de la historia pues según Bedwell es una herramienta narrativa y para "contar una historia mucho más apegada a una nueva generación".

Los productores justificaron también el uso del 3D, pues apuntaron que esta tecnología permite dar (Continued on Page 10)

Agencies team up to provide dental care Stephanie Serda returns to Adelante, Inc. By Kevin Milliken, La Prensa Correspondent knows he got lucky when he went right away from the lobby of the Dental Center of Northwest Ohio to receive X-rays and a teeth cleaning.

Just down the hall, the front lobby filled quickly with 15 to 20 children and their parents, who patiently filled out paperwork while waiting for a team of bilingual staff from Adelante, Inc. and volunteer dentists and hygienists to arrive after a long day at their offices.

The organized chaos on the evening of Wednesday, July 16, 2014 was an orchestrated collaboration of three agencies to ensure Spanish-speaking families received the preventive dental treatment that is so often overlooked in low-income households.

Adelante, Inc., CareNet, and the Dental Center of Northwest Ohio, 2138 Madison Ave., teamed up to take care of shortterm needs that are a whole lot cheaper to provide now than long-term health problems that could develop down the road through neglect, when someone may be forced to go to an emergency room for a serious medical situation.

"Of course, we're going to do whatever we can to connect our clients with the agencies that are being so generous on nights like this," said Stephanie Serda who returned to Adelante about a month ago as the age six months," said Ms.

CONTRACTOR OF STREET

David & Mo Meuse

57-year old Gabriel Nolasco agency's director of programs and services. "Not everyone has the opportunity to go get your teeth cleaned and all the other necessary things that keep you healthy."

"It's very important. We're hoping to make this their dental home and that they feel comfortable coming here." said Debbie Lizcano, dental clinic director. "We love working with the community and serving them."

Even with passage of the Affordable Care Act, there are still low-income families who fall through the healthcare cracks-families who don't qualify for Medicaid in Ohio or some other type of coverage. So CareNet, now in its tenth year, quietly continues to work to provide medical, vision, and dental services to those with no insurance.

Dental care almost always "slips through because they don't think it's as important' as medical or vision care in the minds of many uninsured families, according to the dental clinic director. So routine cleanings and exams often are overlooked-and the lack of such preventive care can be disastrous for young children.

"As the decay continues, infections are able to get worse. They may end up in the hospital-so it's best to get them in as soon as possible, starting at Lizcano. "We never turn a child away. When they're here, we try to do as much as possible-because we never know if they're going to bring them back or not.'

The special evening was only supposed to last two hours. But volunteers patiently worked well beyond that window of time to ensure each child and adult received the best dental care possible. "We like seeing a full lobby. We see it every day," said Ms. Lizcano, who stated the clinic sees 3,000-plus patients each year. A mobile dental clinic also travels each summer to the migrant farm worker camps to ensure other Spanish-speaking families receive treatment on location.

Elizabeth Macino even waited patiently in another room to help ensure the longterm healthcare needs of the families would be met and their questions answered. The CareNet navigator helps families through their health insurance options-either signing up for Medicaid or obtaining a government-backed, low-cost policy through the marketplace created by the Affordable Care Act. But even the latter may still prove too expensive for many low-income families who would need to file for an exemption from obtaining mandatory health insurance.

"With an exemption from the marketplace and a denial from Medicaid, you can still stay on CareNet," she said. "If you're a non-U.S. citizen, you can stay on CareNet. Otherwise, we're not insurance, so you can't stay on CareNet without being fined by the (federal) government. We're trying to make sure they have some medical in case something happens, they've got assistance." CareNet was founded as a community partnership a decade ago to provide free or lowcost healthcare services to people without insurance. The agency's role continues to evolve with the complicated rollout of the Affordable Care Act's requirements. While the agency once served between 5,000 and 6,000 people per year, those numbers have dwindled to about 2,500 as CareNet members obtain insurance through Medicaid. People who need to sign up can call Medicaid at 1-800-324-8680 or contact United Way's 211 telephone helpline.

"It's hard to catch everybody from where I am," she said. "There are still a lot of people out there (in need of health insurance.)"

CareNet continues to serve as the last resort for undocumented families, a stopgap at best with its limited resources. "They sign up through Adelante. They send me the application and get them in the system and get them cards so they can get medication, testing, dentist visits," she said.

At times, it becomes a frustrating system for Spanishspeaking families because of the complicated nature of obtaining health insurance and the built-in language barrier. In almost all cases, an interpreter is needed-and often lacking.

Ms. Serda's homecoming of sorts rounds out a completely bilingual staff at Adelante to better serve its client base and the community at-large. Toledo continues to see a large influx of Spanish-speaking families.

"I love it-whatever I can do to help out in the community. It's great to be back," said Ms. Serda, who previously worked with Adelante's youth programs from 2008 to 2011. "Even today, I saw some of the kids who were in my afterschool program-and they're a couple of feet taller now. It's great to be able to see the families again.'

Adelante staff won't solely rely on obtaining grants be cause, like many Toledo-area nonprofits, the Latino Resource Center is seeing both government and private foundation grants shrink in size and scope. The agency will hold its first-ever carnival fundraiser at the Believe Center on Saturday, August 9.

"We definitely want to make sure the programs we have now are strengthened before we expand anything," said Ms. Serda. "We have some high hopes for what we have coming along in the future."

Over $4M for Lorain County announced,

Funds will advance regional economic development, job training & corrections projects COLUMBUS, July 28, ups with management ser-2014: State Rep. Matt Lundy (D-Elyria) today announced the approval of over $4 million in state funding for economic development, job training and corrections projects in Lorain County. The Lorain County Community College (LCCC)Foundation will receive $3 million to develop and maintain a regional innovation program. $221,976 will go to LCCC for a local job training program and over $800,000 will help with much-needed infrastructure improvements at two Lorain County-based correctional institutions.

The LCCC Foundation is set to receive $3 million for a regional program that will work to assist emerging Northeast Ohio technology companies. The program will assist local entrepreneurs in securing and attracting investments beyond entrepreneurs' personal resources. The program will also assist start-vices and business assistance. The foundation will provide $3,000,000 to match state funds. "LCCC continues to serve and invest in Lorain County and Northeast Ohio. The LCCC Foundation will accelerate the growth of earlystage Ohio technology companies and put Ohio on the frontline with emerging and innovative technology. This funding will help bridge an often-challenging funding gap for emerging businesses in the region and will help prepare entrepreneurs to move technology-based startups further through the funding pipeline," stressed Rep. Lundy.

LCCC will also receive $221,976 to help purchase equipment and construction materials to create a new lab for the school's Micro-Electromechanical Systems program. Students will use the lab for hands-on job training in this multidisciplinary field of engineering. Community members in the industry also will be able to use the facilities for quarterly professional development workshops.

The new lab will provide an opportunity for regional employers to network with student interns, utilize the continuing education seminars and help with the development of the center

In addition to funds being released for LCCC, Lorain County also will see funding for needed projects at the Lorain Correctional Institution (LCI) and Grafton Correctional Institution (GCI). LCI will see a total of $560,835 for general building renovations and repair projects, which include a ceiling grid and tile replacement project and a roof replacement project. GCI will receive funding in the amount of $284.849. This funding will also allow for general building renovations and repair projects, including repairing showers.

Cincinnati charity wants to house immigrants

CINCINNATI, July 25, 2014 (AP): A Cincinnati charity says it has applied for a federal grant aimed at bringing to Ohio some of the immigrant children who have flooded across the U.S. border recently. Catholic Charities

Southwestern Ohio has applied for the grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to help house the children. More than 57,000 minors have arrived since October, mostly from Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador because of drug violence and other problems in those countries.

Ted Bergh, CEO of Catholic Charities, tells The Cincinnati Enquirer (http://cin.ci/ 1zbA9Wt) that the children would be housed in a "dormitory environment" that could provide short-term shelter, education and counseling.

Federal law requires that children be placed in protective care while their immigration cases are resolved.

Martínez-Folger: "One of the biggest challenges in Ohio is the lack of health resources for Latinos" By Federico Martínez, Special to La Prensa

Daniel Hinojosa, of Toledo, was 15 the first time he heard "the whispers"

"Dad, something's wrong; I keep hearing things," the scared teenager told his father as he tried to explain the voices that only he could hear speaking to him in his head.

His father, Raúl Hinojosa, not quite sure what to make of the situation, figured his son was having hearing difficulties. A trip to the doctor confirmed that Daniel's problem wasn't his hearing; it was something much more frightening.

According to the National Institute of Mental Health, 1 out of every 4 people living in the United States has a mental disorder of some kind. Even more discouraging: Less than 1 out every 11 Latinos diagnosed with mental illness ever contacts a mental health specialist, according to results from a 2011 survey on Drug Use and Health: Mental Health Findings conducted by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

About 100 Toledo area residents, primarily Latinos, gathered at SS Peter & Paul Catholic Church, 738 South Saint Clair, Saturday, July 19 to learn more about mental illness and what community resources are available to help families and individuals address the illness. Sharing Hope & Suicide Prevention was presented by Anita Martinez-Folger, a community/minority outreach coordinator for the Greater Toledo branch of the National Alliance on Mental Illness. One of the bizgest challenges in Ohio is the lack of health resources for Latinos, Martínez-Folger said.

"How can Latinos seek mental health services if health providers don't have therapists and counselors who are bilingual and familiar with the Latino culture?" said Martinez-Folger, noting that Northwest Ohio currently has no Spanish-speaking psychiatrists.

Special guest speaker

Linda Alvarado-Arce, a board member for the Mental Health and Recovery Services Board of Lucas County, encouraged the Latino community to "come out and make our needs known. We don't utilize our r e s o u r c e s enough." Ms. Alvarado-

Arce, director of the Board of Community Relations for the city of Toledo, vowed to "champion for more services for the Latino community," through her positions with the city and mental health board, although she offered no specific solutions on how to address health problems facing the Latino community. The need for bilingual and culturally sensitive therapists and counselors is especially important in the Latino community because of the high stigmatization that the term mental illness still carries in the community, Ms. Martínez-

Folger said. Many Latino families often refuse to acknowledge that a mental health issue exists, said Dolores Rodríguez, who recently retired from the Economic Opportunity Planning Association of Greater Toledo, Inc. (EOPA). Rodriguez 'sjob was to help people find emergency medical, financial and housing assistance. Latinos tend to rely on family, traditional healers or churches for help during a health crisis, Ms. Rodríguez said. They often don't understand such symptoms as depression or aphysical ailment, believing such problems are only "temporary." That was the case for the Hinojosa Family. Daniel Hinojosa, now 35-years-old, was 15 before he began exhibiting any noticeable signs of mental illness. He shared his story during Saturday's event. "It was winter and I walked to school that morning; but I didn't realize school was closed because of the weather," he recalled. "I wasn't sure what to do. I just stood there.

"Then I saw some exhaust fumes from a car and a 7-foot guy come out of the car. I rubbed myeyes and, and it was my brother. That was the first time I had a hallucination. It kept getting worse, but I didn't say anything."

His parents initially were not familiar with mental illness. But as the signs grew worse, they initially tried to deny the problem.

"In our community especially we're in denial; we never think it's going to happen to our family," said Raúl Hinojosa. "We're worried that it's a witch doctor's spell; or that it's just temporary. That's where the church has to come in and help educate the public.

"It was really traumatic. For a while, every week he would receive a new package – a new accordion. He didn't even know how to play the accordion. But he would believe that he was a great player and singer and record himself, he even sent copies to record companies."

By the age of 19 Daniel Hinojosa was working as a greeter and "cart guy" at an "Andersons" store in Toledo. One day during work the voices and music in his headbecame so overwhelming, he had a psychiatric breakdown.

It hasn't been an easy recovery. It has taken years of therapy and several attempts by doctors to find the correct blend of medications to help Daniel Hinojosa stabilize his mood swings and suppress the voices and hallucinations. He was diagnosed with both a bipolar disorder and schizophrenia.

"Twe been doing so well since 2004," Daniel Hinojosa said. "Twe heard a voice or two, or experience alittle paranoia, buti's sothing I can't handle."

And much to his father, Raúl Hinojosa's joy, his son has even become "quite an accomplished accordion player. He's quite good."

Latino Days, August 5 and August 7, 2014, where Latino cultures will be shared with all of Northeast Ohio.

The original fair in 1893 was called the West Cuyahoga County Fair, since there were so many other smaller fairs in the area. In 1895, advertising promised fairgoers an exhibition that would "bring together the best of everything." That slogan has been the guiding motto every year since that time.

The first fairgoers went to the Cuyahoga County Fair to socialize, see new farm machinery, and display their animals. Local businesses set up booths

This year The Fair is adding two days to welcome Latinos to the fair. The first Latino day will be Tuesday, August 5. It will feature performances by cultural dancers, mariachi, Salsa Contest, and free salsa lessons. The second day,

Thursday, August 7. will feature musical performances by local Latino artists such as: Justo Saborit, Grupo Son
