Hispanic Roundtable, OCHLA meet with politicians

By Arooj Ashraf, La Prensa Correspondent

Cleveland: The Hispanic Roundtable and the Ohio Commission on Hispanic/Latino Affairs (OCHLA) met with local delegates from Congress, Ohio House, and Senate, as well as Cleveland City Council on Monday, Jan. 30, 2012 to discuss policy matters affecting the Latino community.

Information focused on three major goals of the Hispanic Roundtable, education, empowerment (representation and voting rights), and economic development.

"It is critical that our local lawmakers know who we are, what we need, and how we intend to achieve our mission to provide opportunities of growth and development among Hispanics in Ohio," says, José Feliciano, Chair of the Hispanic Roundtable.

Delegates received brief overviews of the action the Roundtable has taken on each initiative and improvements that can be made with their help. Andrés González said the Hispanic Roundtable is the largest mobilizing vehicle in the form of Convención, which takes place every two years and through the six core areas is emphasizing synergy and reform within the community. "If we do not vote, we have no voice," he said.

State Representative Mike Foley said the meeting helped him understand the needs and demographics of the community better.

Feliciano said the issues bilingual ballots and immigration reform are two contentious issues that ignite emotionally charged rhetoric and hinder progress and the organization wants to remain focused and work on issues that move the community forward. Headed any legislation that mirrors Arizona's Senate Bill 1070 is unnecessary in Ohio.

"We are here trying to engage in self-help, those issues draw a lot of emotion and we get defensive," said Feliciano.

Providing citizens bilingual ballots ensures an informed electorate that is engaged and feels empowered to cast their vote and perform their civic duty. Magda Gomez said the Roundtable wants the electorate to be informed and increase voter registration, request absentee ballots. Pastor Max Rodas added churches are increasing their collaborations and promoting civic involvement among their congregations, and actually making plans to take vans and buses from the churches to cast votes during primary and Presidential elections.

"We are very excited by what is happening in Cleveland, we have much to learn and are waking up," he said. The congregation like those run by Reverend José Reyes are also providing English as second language lessons, citizenship classes and assistance with citizenship applications.

A partnership with predominantly African-American churches is also increasing and Rodas said together a stronger voice is emerging in favor of comprehensive immigration reform.

With nearly 70 percent high school drop-out rate in the Cleveland Metropolitan School Districts focus and strategizes for education assistance and programs raised much concern among legislators.

Victor Ruiz, Executive Director of Esperanza Inc., said Latinos and Asians are the fastest growing communities in Cleveland and they tend to remain close to the city. The education crisis will have detrimental effect on the economy, jobs and crime rate.

"We have home grown talent that is not being nurtured," said Ruiz.

He said Esperanza is addressing core needs for language needs, mentoring, college scholarships but there needs to be more money redirected towards such programs and a cohesive partnerships between business, colleges and employment trainings programs needs to be strengthened.

State Representative Nickie J. Antonio said college is not the right fit for all and questioned the opportunities available.

Ingrid Angel, Director of El Barrio/WESM, said the agency provides several services for job readiness, and opportunities to earn a General Education Diploma; "There are just not enough places offering bilingual GEDs." Angel said this is critical for a demographic that is denied basic access to entry level jobs. She also said more funds need to be directed towards community agencies that are often first access points for assistance. WESM's programs are being replicated in three cities and Angel said more similar programs are needed in the city.

Gus Hoyas said while apprenticeships are providing work experience, many companies are not hiring from the pool and many Latinos are not getting through the front door. Adding to this concern is the E-Verify legislation that Angel believes will discourage employers from even considering candidates and said it is an unnecessary measure in Ohio where less than 2 percent of the population would be disqualified.

State Representative Nan A. Bakers said she understood the concern but the legislation will assist and protect employers.

The Roundtable expects to create a scorecard and follow-up with the legislators semi-annually to discuss the progress and address issues hindering the advancement of the Latino agenda. It will seek to keep the legislators engaged for the needs of communities they serve and strengthen their relationship.

Hispanic Roundtable and OCHLA will also continue to improve their partnerships and work on aligned agendas.

The Hispanic Roundtable is a not-for-profit organization whose mission is to act as a catalyst to empower the Latino Community to become full partners in economic, education, political, civic and social life of Greater Cleveland. The Hispanic Roundtable's philosophy is to encourage

It's time you met ALEC: Quasi-secret right-wing organization revealed as direct source of draconian legislation in Ohio and other states

Op-Ed by Alan Abrams, La Prensa Senior Correspondent

It is enough to make one miss the good old days, when nefarious quasi-secret organizations like SMERSH who were trying to overthrow our democratic way of life were easily vanquished by Agent 007, James Bond.

But a report released in Columbus Feb. 6, 2012 by a group of progressive organizations and grassroots activists reveals a far greater threat to Ohio's citizens – and it is one you've probably never heard of before.

So meet ALEC, the acronym of the American Legislative Exchange Council. They are a super-secret group funded by the 22 corporations that comprise the non-profit organization's Private Enterprise Board. And it is their mandate to write legislation to deprive you of your rights.

What makes this even more serious is that this threat is right in our own back yard.

Where? Look no further than the Ohio Statehouse where the threat is greater than in any other state in the union.

According to the report, in the months between January and October 2010, 33 pieces of legislation were introduced in the Ohio General Assembly, with all of them following 64 examples of ALEC model legislation.

Simply put, the 33 bills the legislators introduced were often taken word-for-word from the ALEC playbook. A side-by-side comparison shows their text was verbatim with that emanating from ALEC.

And nine of those corporate-authored bills have passed into law.

It doesn't end there. ALEC has borne the fingerprints of Ohio's Republican governor John Kasich for decades. Disgraced Ohio congressman Donald "Buz" Lukens was a two-term president of ALEC. As an aide to Lukens, Kasich did all the legislative work for ALEC.

However, Kasich denies he is a member of ALEC despite having been photographed at their sponsored events.

According to Brian Rothenberg, executive director of ProgressOhio, ALEC bears the responsibility for unleashing both SB 5, the vicious attack on collective bargaining, and HB 194, the Voter ID law, upon the people of Ohio. Both were shot down by the outrage of concerned citizens via petitions and the ballot box.

However in other states such as Arizona whose right-wing legislatures have fallen into ALEC's grasp, they are the source responsible for the vicious anti-immigrant laws. It was a move they tried in Ohio with HB 286.

But in the Buckeye State they appear to have found their niche with voter ID laws, despite the fact that voter fraud is not a major issue in the state. The purpose of these laws is clearly to deny the right to vote to minorities and other targeted groups who cannot provide government issued photo ID cards.

ALEC's playbook has also left its footprint in Ohio on bills dealing with education, health care, and the privatization of prisons.

A joint venture of People for the American Way, Common Cause, The Center for Media and Democracy, ProgressOhio and a host of other partners and allies, the report exposes how ALEC operates under a loophole in Ohio's 1994 ethics law that allows it to provide "scholarships" to reimburse legislators and their families for all-expense paid jaunts to posh resorts where they are wine and dined by corporate lobbyists. But the main course is always the same – the corporate and right-wing wish list of legislation.

Ohio law does not allow corporations to influence legislation but it is being done through these scholarships. Indeed, an ALEC-sponsored fundraiser for these scholarships is being held in Columbus on Feb. 7, the same day as the governor delivers his State of the State address.

Alas, our legislators are all too happy to oblige – 43 percent of Ohio's legislators are members of ALEC. Sadly in Ohio, members of both parties have availed themselves of these perks.

State Rep. John Adams, who as Majority Whip is the GOP point man for legislation in the Ohio House, was honored by ALEC in 2010 as their state "legislator" of the year. His aide was chosen as ALEC's aide of the year.

ALEC is funded by millions of dollars from corporations eager to find new ways to influence legislators. At least $9.3 million has been documented as funneling back to influence Ohio legislation.

"When legislation is being written word-for-word from start to finish by corporations, legislators are not meeting their prime responsibility to the citizens," said Rothenberg in what may have been the biggest understatement of the day.

Also speaking was Tim Barga, president of the Ohio AFL-CIO, who said the report underscores that the state's "anti-worker, anti-consumer and anti-education" bills are being created by the "super wealthy industrial class" and by well-financed out-of-state corporate groups. He said these groups care nothing about grass roots but are seeking an electoral voice for special and corporate interests.

He was followed by Tim Shafer, operations manager of OCSCA AFSCME Local 11 and a former corrections officer. Shafer pointed out that on Dec. 31, 2011, Ohio became the first state ever to sell a state correctional facility to a private group, an act in which he said Ohio legislators had clearly been influenced by ALEC.

The tentacles of ALEC are even more far-reaching when it comes to education and the support for the voucher system, a point made by Lt. Andrea Everhart, a Cleveland special education teacher. She accused the ALEC-influenced legislators of using the state's poor children as pawns in their drive to fund private schools with vouchers. She said the private schools do not provide services for special education students such as those she teaches.

"Thirty of the 38 sponsors of the plan to extend vouchers are members of ALEC," said Everhart.

Her comments were echoed by David Romick of the Dayton Education Association who made similar points about charter schools.

Pat Clifford, a state organizer for Ohio Common Cause, focused upon the voter ID laws. "Thirty-four states introduced voter ID bills in 2011 and seven of them passed," he told reporters. "The goal of these laws is to put restrictions on five million people, almost all of whom would vote Democratic in 2012."

Eleven percent of US citizens, 21 million people, do not have government photo ID, said Clifford, who added that at least until today, ALEC has operated under a cloak of secrecy. Efforts to further disenfranchise voters through legislation are continuing in 2012.

Rev. Joel King, a cousin of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., closed the press conference by pointing out that "Ohio legislators have a moral obligation to represent the citizens who elected them."

Every citizen of Ohio should read this document.

Venezuela: Opositores llaman a vencer miedo y votar en primarias

Por FABIOLA SANCHEZ

CARACAS, 9 de febrero del 2012 (AP): Con

concentraciones y marchas en la capital y la ciudad centro costera de Valencia los dos principales precandidatos opositores a la presidencia cerraron el jueves sus campañas para las elecciones primarias en las que se elegirá al candidato único que rivalizará con el presidente Hugo Chávez en los comicios de octubre.

"La fuerza por cambiar a Venezuela, puede más que la fuerza de la amenazas", afirmó el gobernador del estado central de Miranda y precandidato presidencial Henrique Capriles, al llamar a los venezolanos a vencer el miedo y salir a votar en las primarias del domingo.

El bloque opositor denunció en la víspera, sin presentar pruebas, que el gobierno estaría presionando a los empleados públicos para que no participen en las primarias del domingo que estarán abiertas para los 18,2 millones de electores en Venezuela.

Capriles, quien figura como favorito según las encuestas paraganar la consulta opositora, dijo, durante una multitudinaria concentración en un estadio de Valencia, que "el 12 de febrero será la fiesta de la participación, el 13 arranca el juego".

"No hay obstáculo que pueda con el pueblo. No hay obstáculo que detenga a un pueblo que quiere cambio", indicó el dirigente político, de 39 años, quien se mostró confiado de que será el abanderado de la oposición que se enfrentará a Chávez el 7 de octubre.

Capriles, un abogado de orientación centro izquierdista, ofrece que de ser electo presidente utilizará los ingentes ingresos petroleros del país para impulsar la producción y la inversión pública y privada, generar masivas fuentes de empleo que permitan a los pobres salir de su precaria situación, e impulsar la educación, eje que considera fundamental para combatir la pobreza.

Con una marcha por una de las principales avenidas del este de la capital el gobernador del estado occidental del Zulia, Pablo Pérez, cerró también en la jornada su campaña.

Al ritmo de contagiosos tambores y acompañado de varios cientos de seguidores Pérez, de 42 años, marchó por el este de Caracas y concluyó su acto de político con una concentración en la barriada pobre de Petare.

"Vamos a trabajar, a entregar alma, cuerpo y corazón este 12 de febrero, sin miedo, con la esperanza en alto, con la sonrisa en los labios porque vamos a recuperar la Venezuela que todos queremos", dijo el precandidato al instar a los venezolanos a acudir a las urnas.

Pérez llamó a los cerca de 2,3 millones de empleados públicos a respaldar su proyecto político que tiene como banderas el combate a la creciente delincuencia y la defensa de la descentralización, y les aseguró que de ser electo presidente de Venezuela en octubre "aquí no habrá cacería de brujas".

"Pablo Pérez es el que puede derrotar a Hugo Chávez... y saben por qué lo vamos a vencer, porque tenemos el apoyo del humilde, del pobre de Venezuela", afirmó el gobernador zuliano, que de acuerdo a las encuestas figura como segundo favorito superado por Capriles por más de 10 puntos porcentuales.

Al rechazar la cadena de radio y televisión de unas cuatro horas que realizó este jueves el presidente Chávez, en medio de los actos de cierre de campaña de los precandidatos opositores, Pérez dijo que "no voy a ser un gobernante de cadenas... aquí lo que habrá es un presidente que escuche al pueblo".

Además de Capriles y Pérez, en la contienda opositora están participando también la congresista independiente María Corina Machado, de 44 años; Diego Arria, ex embajador de Venezuela ante la ONU, y el ex diputado izquierdista Pablo Medina.

En los comicios del domingo también elegirán 17 candidatos opositores para las elecciones de gobernadores que están prevista para diciembre próximo.

El Centro Carter, que es una organización estadounidense de defensa de la democracia, anunció el jueves que por solicitud de la oposición enviará a Venezuela un pequeño grupo de estudio para seguir las primarias y "recoger criterios y perspectivas" sobre las elecciones que se desarrollarán este año en el país.

La delegación estará encabezada por Jennifer McCoy, quien es directora de las Américas del grupo que fue fundado por el ex presidente estadounidense Jimmy Carter.

Republicans targets child tax break for undocumented immigrants

By ANDREW TAYLOR, Associated Press

WASHINGTON, DC, Feb. 8, 2012 (AP): Republicans are looking to deny child tax credits to undocumented immigrants, refund checks averaging $1,800 a family, in an effort that has roused anger among Latinos and some Democratic lawmakers.

The proposal, which would require people who claim the federal credit to have Social Security numbers to prove they are working legally, is being offered as a way to help pay for extending the Social Security tax cut for most US-American wage-earners. It would trim federal spending by about $10 billion over a decade.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid says the proposal unfairly goes after the children of poor Latino workers. Such kids often are U.S. citizens, even when their parents are not, because they were born in this country.

Says Leticia Miranda, senior policy adviser of the Latino rights organization National Council of La Raza: "People who are making close to the minimum wage and are raising children in this country—and we're asking them to pay for the payroll tax cut?" She says, "It's outrageous and it's crazy."

Undocumented immigrants have been barred from other refundable tax credits—in which low-income workers not only don't owe income taxes but receive payments from the government—such as the earned income tax credit. Such credits are a popular anti-poverty tool in part because a recipient has to hold a job to receive the benefit.

But a 1997 law enacting a $500 per-child tax credit does not specifically exclude undocumented immigrants from collecting. It was significantly expanded in 2001 to gradually reach $1,000, and rules were eased so that many more people could get it on a refundable basis. It was made more generous in 2009 so that more taxpayers could claim the credit or claim a larger amount. On the other side, Republicans and some Democrats say what is crazy is even having a debate over whether the government should be cutting checks to people who have sneaked into the country without documentation.

"We have rules about tax credits and benefits, and it seems to me they need to be applied fairly and across the board," said Democrat Sen. Claire McCaskill, who is facing a difficult re-election bid in Missouri. "If there are rules, they need to be enforced. I think it's just that simple. I don't think it's complicated."

"Although the law prohibits aliens residing without authorization in the United States from receiving most federal public benefits, an increasing number of these individuals are filing tax returns claiming this refundable credit," Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Texas, said when the House debated the payroll tax cut measure in December. "Illegal immigrants bilked $4.2 billion from the U.S. taxpayers (in 2010). I think that's the time that we fixed it."

The situation has Democrats in a box. If they fight the Republican effort to cut back payments of the tax credit, they will be favoring the delivery of refunds to people who not only do not owe income taxes but are not supposed to be in the country in the first place.

What's more, closing the loophole would raise real money—an estimated $10 billion over 10 years under the approach favored by House Republicans.

The Treasury Department says that in the 2010 filing year more than $4 billion in child credit refunds went to 2.3 million people who filed tax returns but did not have Social Security numbers to prove they were citizens or legal workers. That was a four-fold increase over five years earlier.

On the other side are politically influential Latino groups, a vital Democratic-friendly constituency. Opponents of tightening eligibility for the child tax credit point out that six of every seven affected families are Latino, with an average household income of about $21,000. Tax credits of up to $1,000 per child and make a huge difference at such income levels.

Latinos point out that in many instances the tax credit goes to workers who are not citizens but whose children are, because they were born in the country and have their own Social Security numbers. They say such children should reap the benefit of the tax credit just like other children in comparable economic circumstances.

Group projects 12.2 million Latino voters in 2012

By SUZANNE GAMBOA, Associated Press

WASHINGTON, DC, Feb. 8, 2012 (AP): A national group of Latino public officeholders is projecting that 12.2 million Latinos will vote in the U.S. general election in November.

The turnout projection was announced Wednesday by the bipartisan National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials Educational Fund. The group based its projection on average increases in turnout in previous elections as reported by the Census Bureau.

Latino voter turnout in 2008 was 9.7 million. The executive director of the officeholders group, Arturo Vargas, says a major factor for the increased projection this year is that an estimated 50,000 Latinos turn 18 each month. That is the U.S. voting age.

Vargas says the numbers suggest that presidential candidates should develop an outreach strategy for Latinos.

Immigration bashing to reach fever pitch as GOP primary focuses upon Michigan, Ohio

Op-Ed by Alan Abrams, La Prensa Senior Correspondent

La Prensa readers in the Midwest will be closely watching the results of the Michigan primary on February 28, 2012 (followed by the Ohio primary on March 6). But a panel of voting-trend experts believe that every Latino voter in the country should also be listening to the rhetoric and looking at the Arizona race that same day, Feb. 28th.

That was the message of a February 9 press conference on Latino voters and the politics of immigration sponsored by America's Voice, one of the leading national organizations seeking comprehensive immigration reform.

As the four leading GOP candidates vie with one another to convince voters that they are the conservative saviors of the party, the anti-immigration fervor will surely reach new heights. After all, Arizona was first out of the gate with SB 1070, the now-challenged restrictive immigration law.

Thanks to the impact of social media, the anti-immigrant comments made in Arizona will "not be said in a vacuum," says Frank Sherry, executive director of America's Voice. He believes that is an important lesson for Latinos across the country to remember in November's general election.

As the conference pointed out, the names of the politicians who are endorsing the candidates as well as those the candidates have embraced are further clues to how far to the right the candidates are willing to go on the issue of immigration. On February 8, in an event not widely reported by mainstream media, GOP frontrunner Mitt Romney proudly announced his candidacy had received the endorsement of former California governor and Senator Pete Wilson.

No, your memory isn't playing tricks on you. That's the same Pete Wilson who rode to reelection in 1994 on the back of the draconian Proposition 187, the grandfather of all the subsequent anti-immigration laws passed this decade in Arizona, Alabama and other states.

Although Pete Wilson won the battle, the GOP lost the war.

Conference participant Gary Segura is a professor at California's Stanford University and the principal of Latino Decisions, the polling organization. During the call, he told reporters that Wilson's backing of Proposition 187 is widely credited with pushing Latino voters away from the GOP. This resulted in tilting the political balance to make what was formerly a swing state into one that is today almost solidly Democratic.

Although Proposition 187, which pandered to the worst fears of uninformed voters by targeting the state's undocumented immigrants, was eventually struck down by the courts, the damage to the GOP was its legacy. By maintaining that Latinos were irrelevant to California, it reversed a then-slow but steady trend of Latinos supporting the GOP.

Governor Susana Martínez (New Mexico) and former Governor Jeb Bush (Florida) have recognized this shift and has warned the GOP to tone down its anti-immigrant rhetoric. Bush is married to a Latina.

"Immigration is inseparable from the Latino vote," said Segura, noting that 87 percent of Latinos in California at the time of Proposition 187 were within two generations of the immigrant experience — their parents or grandparents were born outside of the United States. A majority knew someone who had been subjected to immigration proceedings. But more importantly, many Latinos had themselves been swept up in enforcement policies such as racial profiling.

"Those attacks mobilized the Latino electorate," said Segura.

The result? After Proposition 187 was declared unconstitutional, fear and hopelessness was replaced with a massive mobilization. As Eliseo Medina, International Secretary-Treasurer of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), pointed out, "In the first four years after Proposition 187, the growth of the Latino vote outpaced the general population five to one. In 1994, Latinos comprised eight percent of the voters, today it is 19 percent and growing. There were 1.1 million new registered voters in the 1990s, and one million of them were Latinos."

That was enough to change the complexion of California's government. Today, all of the state's top elected officials are Democrats, and Democrats control the state legislature.

"Pete Wilson is a hero of the Latino community," said Segura. "He contributed to registering more Latino voters than anyone in American history. And one wonders why Romney would seek the endorsement of someone who hasn't held office for 14 years and who is toxic to Latino voters. Romney is either getting bad advice or giving up on the Latino vote."

Medina echoed Segura's statement and added that in his "46 years as an organizer, Pete Wilson is the best organizer of Latino voters ever seen in terms of Latinos becoming citizens, registering to vote, and turning out on election day."

"The Latino vote can make the difference between winning and losing in states where Latinos have a considerable presence such as Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Nevada, and New Mexico, states where the Latino vote is growing faster than the general public. Soon more states will start to look like California.

"Romney must have flunked history in school because he hasn't learned the lessons. To win, you need to attract voters to you, not drive them away," said Medina, adding "To paraphrase another recent California governor, Hasta la Vista, Mitt."

It should also be noted that Romney has repeatedly stated on his Campaign Trail that he would veto any DREAM Act.

Other speakers such as David Damore, a political science professor at the University of Las Vegas, and Robert Preuhs, a political science professor at Metropolitan State College of Denver, concurred.

However, Romney hasn't stopped with Pete Wilson. He has also embraced Texas congressman Lamar Smith and Kris Kobach, two other leading anti-immigrant movement luminaries. The Southern Poverty Law Center has identified Kobach, the Kansas Secretary of State, as the man behind the scenes of the new state anti-immigrant laws.

Alas, Romney isn't alone. In response to a question from La Prensa, Latinos now know that former congressman Tom Tancredo, an architect of anti-immigration sentiment, threw his support behind Rick Santorum, the winner of the February Colorado GOP primary.

So who can we expect disgraced Arizona Sheriff Joe Arpaio to endorse now that his first choice, Texas Governor Rick Perry is out of the race?

A key element in this story is the demographic change in the United States. As professor Segura concluded, "The white share of the electorate has declined to 70 percent now from the mid-80s. There has been a drain of white voters out of the system as compared to Latino and Asian-American groups." And this has the potential of tipping the electorate.

Although Latino voters did not play a key role in the primaries in states like Colorado, November will surely be different.

There's another message here for the GOP. Adding a Hispanic name like that of Cuban-born U.S. Senator from Florida Mario Rubio to the GOP ticket as the vice president candidate won't fool Latino voters.

Romney and the GOP might consider paying a little more attention to the axiom of Spanish-born philosopher George Santayana (Jorge Agustín Nicolás Ruiz de Santayana y Borrás): Those who cannot learn from history are doomed to repeat it.

Owens Alumni Association accepting nominations for Outstanding Service Awards

Owens Community College's Alumni Association is recognizing the tremendous contribution that area police, fire and emergency medical professionals make to Northwest Ohio's surrounding communities by hosting the ninth annual Outstanding Service Awards. The recipients will be honored as part of a community celebration on Friday, April 27, 2012.

The College's Alumni Association is currently accepting nominations for the Outstanding Service Awards. Area residents are invited to nominate an individual or individuals who have demonstrated exceptional service above and beyond the call of duty. Nominations need to be returned to the College's Office of Alumni Relations by Wednesday, Feb. 29, 2012. The award is not limited to a single recipient, and the College's Alumni Association encourages the nomination of more than one person when teamwork was the key element in their success.

The five awards, which will be presented at the community celebration, are within the categories of: Outstanding Police Officer, Firefighter, Emergency Medical Technician, Service to Community, and Community Spirit. Selection criteria will be based upon a nomination process with candidates demonstrating exceptional service related to dedication, ingenuity, bravery, special skills and/or to the community over a sustained period of time. The awards are not limited to a single recipient.

For more information about the Outstanding Service Award Celebration, or the nomination process, contact the College's Alumni Relations Office at (567) 661-7410 or 1-800-GO-OWENS, Ext. 7410.

St. Francis de Sales HS hosts Madre-Hijo Baile

Toledo: The St. Francis de Sales HS Mother-Son Dance, Black Ops Event, was held in the school gym January 29, 2012. The theme and decorations were chosen in tribute to our armed forces. Male and female marines greeted the moms and sons as they arrived. Military colors of tan, green and white were used along with model tanks and soldiers on the tables. Many couples were dressed in army fatigues from head to toe.

The delicious buffet chicken dinner with all the trimmings was catered by Darcy and Patty Irons. Following dinner, over 500 sons and mothers, or other special female guest for the night, jammed onto the dance floor to the music provided by MC Sounds for every kind of dance from the electric slide, hip-hop, and line dancing, to the bump and disco, and more, including slow dances.

Each year seniors sing a special song tribute to their moms. This year the boys rewrote the words to "My Girl" as "My Mom" followed by a slow dance. The juniors, sophomores, and freshmen also danced with their moms during specially designated songs.

A huge surprise this year included the senior moms performing a flash mob dance led and choreographed by senior mom Melissa Lohr, mother of Todd Smith, to Michael Jackson's "Thriller."

Co-chairs Dianna Johnson, Chelle Pelz, Laurie Dombi, Kim Wesley were assisted by a large committee of moms including Kris

Lucas County CASA Elects New Board Members

Feb. 6, 2012: Lucas County CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocates) has announced the selection of its newest members to the Lucas County CASA/CRB Volunteer Association Advisory Board. The Board selected the following individuals of the greater Toledo community to join the Advisory Board:

Lourdes Santiago, JD was recently appointed as the director of Toledo's embattled neighborhoods department. She has previously served as a Senior Attorney for the City of Toledo Law Department for over 30 years and was appointed as a Council member with the Toledo City Council in 2006. She is the

NorthCoast Congressional race enters debate phase

By Kevin Milliken for La Prensa

Feb. 14, 2012: Long-time Toledo Democrat Marcy Kaptur is moving from the endorsement phase of her Congressional campaign to debate preparation, as she readies to square off against long-time friend and colleague Dennis Kucinich all along Ohio's NorthCoast for the new Ninth District congressional seat. Redistricting and redrawn lines have pitted the two against each other in the March primary.

Dennis Kucinich opened a Toledo campaign headquarters Saturday morning at a former Latina florist shop called Tia's, in the Old South End at 1010 Broadway, near the corner of Broadway and Jervis. About two-dozen Latino supporters greeted the Cleveland Democrat for a brief question-and-answer session. The visit continues Kucinich's ongoing attempt to court the Toledo Latino vote and is a follow-up to his surprise appearance at the Sofia Quintero Center's First Friday event last week.

Ms. Kaptur, meantime, hosted the Ninth Congressional District Invitational Art Exhibition Sunday afternoon in the lobby of Fifth Third Center at One Seagate downtown. The student art exhibit runs through Feb. 24, with a similar event in March at Oberlin College. Students received awards of etched glass at the event co-sponsored by the Arts Commission of Greater Toledo.

Both candidates also spent time with the Lucas County Democratic Party screening committee on Sunday seeking a primary endorsement, an unusual move because the county party has a standing policy of not endorsing candidates before a primary when there is more than one Democrat seeking the position. However, the congressional race is unique because it pits two Democratic incumbents against each other for one seat. Ohio lost two congressional seats following the 2010 census. The party's executive committee is expected to make an endorsement Thursday evening.

"I don't think it's unusual, but it is unusual to have a Democrat from another county come into Lucas County and screen. That is unusual," said Ms. Kaptur who added she "hoped so" when asked if she thought her local endorsement would be a slam dunk.

"I went in with no expectations but to communicate," said Kucinich. "That is to communicate to the people of Toledo my desire to be of service to them in the United States Congress. The people will always make the right decision. I have no quarrel with that."

The two candidates already screened for endorsements before Cuyahoga and Lorain County Democratic Party committees. To date, Erie and Ottawa County Democrats have stayed neutral. Mr. Kucinich received the endorsement of Cleveland Democrats, his home territory. Ms. Kaptur quickly pointed out Lorain's mayor and many city officials have personally endorsed her.

Ms. Kaptur stated her message to her own county party was her "desire to serve the expanded Ninth District with the same vigor and determination" that she has the existing Ninth District.

Kucinich described his screening appearance as "a conversation" with Lucas County Democratic leaders.

"It was a great meeting," Kucinich said afterward. "I just pay attention to communicating with the people who I'm asking for their votes. That's where my communication is. Endorsements, things like that—I just talk to people. I don't worry about anything else."

Congressman Kucinich supports the DREAM Act

Kucinich continued to advocate his support for the DREAM Act, which Ms. Kaptur voted against in December of 2010. The bill provides educational and citizenship opportunities to the children of undocumented immigrants. President Barack Obama urged passage of the bill in his State of the Union speech last month.

"When you consider many Latinos have been deprived of opportunities simply because their parents were not documented. That should rise to the level of a national concern," Kucinich said.

"All I had to do was meet a single student in Arizona who couldn't pursue his college education without assistance because his parents were undocumented. I just needed to meet one, but unfortunately, I met many wherever I went. This is an urgent matter, to get the DREAM Act passed. I lobbied other members of Congress. There was an urgency then and still is an urgency. There is a benefit from this to everyone, far and wide. This is a defining moment of who we are."

Ms. Kaptur tried to explain the political context of her vote during a one-on-one interview with La Prensa. Mid-term Congressional elections were occurring at the time the DREAM Act came up for a vote.

"First of all, we need comprehensive immigration reform. The way that bill came to the (House) floor, it was not," she said emphatically. "It was like nothing else had happened, but because there were elections in the Southwest, here's something that could be presented. Even though it was promised it would be taken up in the Senate, it was not. So I viewed it as a false promise."

Ms. Kaptur then went on to talk about comprehensive immigration reform in a broader context. She even dropped the names of some Latino congressional colleagues that she stated she has argued "to make this about all of us, not just about some of us."

"The face of immigration reform should not just be Latino," she said. "The main group that violates visas is the Poles. There's a problem with Polish visa waivers. We have large numbers of families here from the Middle East. We have problems with Arab family reunification."

Ms. Kaptur stated supporters of the DREAM Act in Congress need to be thinking of "a winning political coalition" to ensure passage. She stated

Dennis Kucinich

President Obama's support and recent executive orders affecting immigration "should help."

Congresswoman Kaptur's take on amnesty

She seemed to take the same tact with amnesty for undocumented immigrants, a cause that has been championed in recent years by local groups who represent migrant workers, especially Farm Labor Organizing Committee (FLOC) founder and President Baldemar Velásquez.

"I am for legalization that applies to all groups equally," Ms. Kaptur said. "I like the term 'earned citizenship.' Some path to citizenship that allows people to reunite their families and do it in a manner that everyone thinks is fair, so that one group is not targeted, everyone is treated fairly, that everybody knows what the rules are. That is a winning coalition."

"We have to remember where we've come from as a nation and those who have determined to come to America in search of a better life," said Kucinich. "We must not forget that impulse and we must respect that as part of the energy that created America, that makes America a great country. As long as I'm in Congress, I'm going to be ever-mindful of the need to reach out to those who would otherwise be left aside."

The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA)

also came up for discussion with the candidates. Ms. Kaptur called it "the one piece of legislation that relates to Latin immigration."

The Congresswoman pointed out that she has walked the U.S. Mexico border and traveled to Mexico to see firsthand the plight of farmers and agricultural workers following the passage of NAFTA, which she blamed for economically decimating Mexican farms and farming families.

"We said in the 1990s that before NAFTA passes, millions of people are going to lose their farms—and they did," she said, blaming a lack of "adjustment provisions" in the trade bill.

"My opponent has never been down there," she said. "He's never gone through companies, never traveled with Baldemar as I have to try to take the crime out of labor trafficking across the continent. I have."

Ms. Kaptur advocated for revisiting NAFTA and renegotiating adjustment provisions for Mexican farmers who have been plunged into poverty.

"What it's done is create a surge of people who will work for anything," she said. "They have no rights, they are being trafficked. It's ugly, an ugly thing that is going on. What's interesting is it's being handled as an immigration issue—and not an agricultural and labor rights issue. It's an economic issue and they're handling it as a social issue."

"We need to cancel NAFTA," countered Kucinich. "We need to create a new trade agreement with worker's rights, human rights, and environmental quality protections. What happened is once

ANOTHER FACE OF Recovery

I was the problem child who started drinking at 13. At 16 I was expelled from Toledo Public Schools for behavior, alcohol and marijuana. Later it was crack.

My family tried to help, but I pushed them aside because of my addiction. In fact, I stole from them. Doing time at the Correctional Treatment Facility got me on the right path—to sobriety and treatment for depression and bipolar disorder.

Today I work at The Recovery Center helping others find their way out of chemical dependency, just like I did. This year I'll finish my bachelor's degree in social work so I can give back. My name is Monica Allison.

NAFTA passed, wages went down in Mexico. We need to recognize NAFTA was all about cheap labor. We need trade agreements that build up wage levels in Mexico, as well as wage levels in this country."

Many political pundits believe the March primary will be decided within the city limits of Lorain, which has a 25 percent Latino population. However, Ms. Kaptur pointed out the newly drawn congressional district is split into thirds population-wise when Lucas and Ottawa counties are combined, and Erie and Lorain counties are combined.

Voter turnout is critical in the North Coast district

"It's going to boil down to voter turnout," she said. "Every single county is important. It boils down to turnout in each one of those. You can't forget any part of this region."

There are parts of 5 counties in the nascent North Coast district, which is a 100-mile-plus snakelike stretch that hugs Lake Erie from parts of Toledo to parts of Cleveland—this is an important segment of the readership area of La Prensa.

"Toledo is important. Every community is important," Kucinich said. "You don't minimize anywhere. I'm not into political analysis."

But at least Democrats seem to be embracing the newly-redrawn Ninth District as a way to link Ohio's Lake Erie shoreline in a cooperative way. Ms. Kaptur metaphorically referred to the lakeshore communities in the narrowly-drawn district as "many beads on a necklace."

"Because of all the job washout in northern Ohio, the biggest challenge we face is self-confidence," said Ms. Kaptur. "We're looking at different sectors to right them in terms of job development. The food sector is one that doesn't require much capital, but there is so much abundance there. We've been talking about what kinds of jobs we can generate from all the culture of the people there."

The congresswoman mentioned all the Latino cuisine she's experienced while traveling to Lorain and other cities. She joked at one church that the food was so good that it could be "part of the first Latino microwavable meal that's edible." She had attended a minority business assistance council meeting in Elyria the night before.

"I'm trying to work on connectivity across the coast," declared Ms. Kaptur, who pointed out there is an energy with new mayors in many communities that could be a strong asset. "There are really some dynamoleaders. We can weave them together for some conversations. I think we should be the affordable Hilton Head, the affordable Cape Cod of the Midwest."

Ms. Kucinich highlighted his record in Congress in securing a new veteran's clinic and a pair of bridges being built in Cleveland suburbs.

"I try to deliver specifically for my constituents—and that's what people want a member of Congress to do," Kucinich said. "But in addition, I work on the bigger-picture issues."

Both candidates admitted they are "learning a lot" about the future aspirations of unfamiliar parts of the district. Whoever wins the March primary, each member of Congress has pledged to work to unite communities as well as foster regional collaboration beyond Northwest Ohio or Northeast Ohio.

Future and past debates

Ms. Kaptur and Kucinich will square off against each other at public debates on three consecutive nights next week in three different communities: Sandusky, Lorain, and Toledo.

The pair, along with Democratic candidate Graham Veysey, just completed a vigorous TV debate in Cleveland. The debate was taped as an edition of In the Spotlight, a public affairs program aired primarily in Cuyahoga and Lorain.

The contestants will participate in a debate Monday, Feb. 21 in a televised debate at WTOL-TV 11's studios in downtown Toledo from 6:15-7 p.m. There is word of a possible second Toledo debate Fri., Feb. 24 at Woodward High School, although there were few details released at press-time.

Both candidates also are confirmed to appear at a roundtable question-and-answer session sponsored by the Coalition for Hispanic/Latino

Marcy Kaptur

Issues and Progress (CHIP) on Wednesday, Feb. 22, at the St. Joseph's Community Center, 201 W. 21st St. in Lorain, from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

The following evening, Thursday, Feb. 23, at 7:30 p.m., Ms. Kaptur and Kucinich will participate in a Sandusky debate at the Cedar Point Center on the BGSU-Firelands campus.

Vicente Fernández anuncia su retiro

MEXICO, 9 de febrero del 2012 (AP): Vicente Fernández no volverá a cantar, al menos en los escenarios.

El legendario cantante mexicano de música ranchera anunció que a lo largo de 2012 se despedirá del público con giras por Latinoamérica, España y Estados Unidos para poner así fin a una trayectoria de más de cuatro décadas.

Fernández dijo la noche del miércoles a la cadena Televisa que tomó la decisión horas antes, cuando en una rueda de prensa en la ciudad occidental de Guadalajara un periodista le preguntó si había pensado en retirarse.

"No lo tenía pensado, alguien me lo preguntó", dijo el cantante.

Aseguró que en ese momento, sin siquiera haberlo meditado, decidió que era momento de hacerlo.

"Así soy... así me retiré del cine", expresó el intérprete, quien llegó a rodar más de 30 películas.

Añadió que a partir del próximo año se dedicará a pasar tiempo con su esposa, sus hijos y sus nietos.

Fernández, quien este mes cumple 72 años, había dicho en otras ocasiones que seguiría cantando mientras el público le aplaudiera. Si bien su popularidad no ha disminuido, aseguró que no decide retirarse porque se sienta mal o cansado, simplemente que la pregunta del reportero, al que no identificó, tomó la determinación.

"Al público le debo un respeto y un cariño tan grande que antes que mi voz empiece a mermar hay que tener el valor suficiente para retirarse de una carrera que es mi vida", dijo.

El llamado "Charro de Huentitlán" ha sido reconocido dentro y fuera de México.

En 2002 fue agasajado por la Academia Latina de la Grabación como Persona del Año y en el 2008 el entonces gobernador de Nuevo México Bill Richardson declaró que cada 12 de julio se celebraría ahí un día en honor a Vicente Fernández.

Letters from the Heart

The care and support were tailored for each of our needs.

We learned that my husband, Ken, was dying when our four kids were very young. I didn't know what to do, so we turned to Hospice of Northwest Ohio. They made sure the needs of each family member were taken care of. For Ken, they managed his pain and other symptoms. For the children, counseling to deal with what was happening. For me, answers to my questions day or night, and respite care so I could rest and take better care of our kids.

Kim, 1996

For 30 years, families have been writing to Hospice of Northwest Ohio to express their thanks. Yet they often also say, "We wish we would have started hospice care sooner." The earlier you seek our expertise and support, the more we can do to help.

Cuban artists share history and cultural similarities at CIA

By Arooj Ashraf, La Prensa Correspondent

Cleveland Institute of Art (CIA) continues cultural enrichment and collaborative education through its Cuba Project Symposium as the second group of artists arrive for the Spring 2012 semester to teach, create, and open the window of possibilities for local audiences.

On Feb. 11, 2012, the school held its second symposium welcoming husband-and-wife team José Toriac and Meira Marrero, who collaborate on paintings and installations, and painter and video artist Alex Hernández Dueñas. The keynote speaker for the event was Rachel Weiss, author of "To and From Utopia in the New Cuban Art."

"The fall Cuban artists-in-residence seamlessly integrated with the community. They widened our students' perspectives on creating socially engaging work and how to present that work to an audience," said David Hart, CIA's associate professor of Art History and co-director of the Cuba Project.

The project is funded by the Cleveland Foundation's Creative Fusion initiative, which also supported the College's exploratory trip to Cuba in the fall of 2010. During this trip, three CIA professors interviewed 44 Cuban artists to identify mid-career and emerging artists. In the fall, artists Osmey Ortega and Alejandro Aguilera became the project's first artists-in-residence.

Weiss, an art historian and professor devoted to study of Cuban art, founded the first art residence for Cuban artists in the United States in the mid eighties, of which Aguilera was the first recipient.

Much like Ortega and Aguilera, the recently arrived artists are eager to explore the possibilities presented by this fellowship.

What do they expect to take back?

"Lots of pictures," says Toriac, and all three laugh.

"Wonderful memories," adds Marrero.

It is only after seeing their work does one understand depth in such simple responses. Their collaborations unify historical facts, tainted with nostalgia, framed in reality.

While Cuban artists enjoy more freedom of expression than other professionals on the island, they walk a fine line — like a medieval court jester that can mock the royals and be safe but a minister finds himself beheaded for the same comment, says Toriac.

"You have to be very clear what you are creating is a piece of art and not a political statement, or go to jail," he said. Even with that fine balance creativity is curtailed by the stringent ministry that can kill ideas by simply saying: "It's not the right time."

A statement the duo have heard many times, and often moved on to even greater ideas. One project featured portraits of the island's governors throughout history, including U.S. 7th President, William Howard Taft, who temporarily became Governor of Cuba in 1906 to negotiate the end of revolt staged by General Enrique Loynaz del Castillo.

Toriac said the exhibition was a lesson in history for most Cubans who tend not to look at history through timelines of leaders but rather the collective community. All set to display in a room that overlooked the presidential palace, the exhibition was indefinitely delayed and the artists forced to use plan B.

Using Walker Evans photographs of the average Cuban people, suffering under a U.S. supported dictatorship of Gerardo Machado y Morales, imprinted and gold leafed on materials rescued like windows, doors and hinges of the era the exhibition paralleled the connections between the past and present.

Toriac said the irony of using gold leaf, which is impossible to find in Cuba, was they imported it from Spain. "So we used photos from U.S. artists, gold leaf from Spain's city where the Spanish took the gold they stole from the Americas, to show people in Cuba."

Hart said the most intriguing aspect of their works was the amount of research and investigation that goes into each project. "I am an art historian; everything we exhibit is in the public domain," said Marrero, facts that can be verified.

The result of such extensive research uncovers details that often surprise them. During their recreation of the most iconic images of the revolution they discovered the photos were staged years later. "They did not have good photos, so they hired a professional photographer, and we thought if they can recreate the moments so can we," said Marrero.

Their work also carries a mélange of ironic comedy, like a white wall covered in hash markings counting: "The number of times the enemy has tried to kill Castro," says Toriac. This exhibition was celebrated rather than censored by the ministers.

He said artists in Cuba have the responsibility to provoke thought and finding the right balance between addressing the uncomfortable topics and pushing the limits.

Hernández Dueñas said he is humbled to be in the presence of artists like Toriac and Marrero and honored to share his work alongside them. Looking forward to teaching and painting in Cleveland he is keen to find the similarities between the two countries.

In 2007 he discovered family home videos exchanged from his family in Havana, Cuba and Miami, FL. For project 'Inventario' he juxtaposes the two videos on the same screen, as the narrators tour their homes, zoom in on Christmas decorations, and walk room-to-room to share their lives. His silk paintings show the similarities in house structures, details of living rooms with identical elephants that his grandmother bought two of.

He emphasizes the individualization of mass produced figurines as they become aesthetics of each home's individuality yet ties the two families through history and shared culture.

Another canvas work features the items for a lazy Sunday afternoon in the backyard, decked with lawn chair preparing for a barbeque a truly U.S. concept that is sent back to the island through family narration. "I like to explore the anthropology and static life," he said.

Hart said the Cuban Project has launched much collaboration and discussion within Cleveland and various events will be held throughout the semester.

Visita del Sr. Vicente Sánchez-Ventura en El Centro de la Mujer, Toledo

Por La Prensa

El día 13 de febrero, el Sr. Sánchez-Ventura, cónsul titular de México en Detroit visitó El Centro de la Mujer, en Toledo, Ohio, con el propósito de fortalecer los lazos entre los servicios de El Centro y el Consulado.

La visita del Sr. Sánchez fue programada durante el horario de grupo de las participantes, ya que su presentación incluyó un panorama de los servicios y actividades del consulado.

El Sr. Sánchez alentó a las participantes a que continúen enriqueciendo sus vidas, educándose, y aprendiendo todo lo que esté al alcance de ellas. "Las mujeres son quienes manejan la familia", afirmó.

Sánchez dedicó tiempo para que las personas pudieran hacer preguntas, se presentaron personalmente y compartieran sus inquietudes.

Alrededor de 20 personas asistieron al encuentro, entre ellos Pastor Steve Anthony, director ejecutivo de Toledo Area Ministries, Mary Schmidauber Directora de Second Chance, Elizabeth Guerra, representando Healthy Connections Home Visitation Project de St. Vincent Mercy Medical Center y representantes de La Prensa, quienes también pasaron tiempo con los niños.

El Sr. Sánchez se despidió llevándose un listado de nombres e información requerida por las participantes, que compartirá con personal del consulado, para que ellas puedan recibir la atención adecuada.

Canada's population grows 5.9 percent since 2006

By ROB GILLIES, Associated Press

TORONTO, Feb. 8, 2012 (AP)—Canada's population grew by 5.9 percent to 33.5 million over the last five years on the strength of immigration.

Statistics Canada released census data Wednesday that shows the country's immigration program accounted for about two-thirds of the increase in population over the last decade.

The report shows people are flocking to Canada's resource-rich western provinces. The population of oil-rich Alberta jumped 10.8 percent, while potash-rich Saskatchewan grew 6.7 percent.

Ontario, the center of the country's manufacturing sector, is the only province to see its growth rate drop since 2006. But with 38.4 percent of the population, Ontario remains Canada's most populous province.

Argentina going to UN in Falklands dispute

By MICHAEL WARREN

BUENOS AIRES, Feb. 7, 2012 (AP)—President Cristina Fernandez said Tuesday that Argentina will formally complain to the U.N. Security Council that Britain has created a serious security risk by sending one of its most modern warships to the disputed Falkland Islands.

She accused British Prime Minister David Cameron of militarizing their nations' dispute over sovereignty of the South Atlantic archipelago, which Argentines say the British stole from them nearly 180 years ago.

Argentines are united in their desire to win back the islands they call the Malvinas through diplomacy and negotiation, she said, urging Cameron to "give peace a chance" by avoiding moves that push the dispute into dangerous territory.

"We have suffered too much violence already to be attracted to military games and wars," Fernandez said during a nationally broadcast address.

Britain says it originally discovered the islands and claimed them a century before Argentina existed. The Spanish crown claimed them for years, and then an independent Argentina held them before Britain seized them in 1833, driving off the gauchos.

Fernandez blamed Argentina's 1976-83 military junta and its allies in Argentina's media for rushing to invade the islands on April 2, 1982—the start of a brief war that killed 649 Argentines and 257 Britons. Britain routed the ill-prepared Argentine troops, humiliating the junta and hastening the Argentina's return to democracy.

Other than the planned complaint at the United Nations, Fernandez's speech revealed no new international measures to support Argentina's claim to the Falklands.

The claim is enshrined in Argentina's constitution and will remain a national priority, but it will be pursued through diplomacy, not war, Fernandez said.

She urged Britain to comply with United Nations resolutions calling on both sides to negotiate the islands' sovereignty—a message she has given at nearly every international forum she has attended as president.

"No land should end up being a trophy of war," she said.

British governments have said there is nothing to negotiate. London insists it won't discuss sovereignty over the islands without the support of the Falklanders, a population of about 3,100 who clearly want to remain British.

A call seeking comment from Britain's Foreign Office was not returned late Tuesday.

During her speech, Fernandez decreed that a long-secret analysis of the junta's failures be made public in 30 days.

She also announced that a mental health center would be opened to care for Malvinas veterans, hundreds of whom have committed suicide in the years since the invasion.
